What CP504 Actually Means

CP504 is the IRS's Intent to Levy notice. If you received this letter, the IRS has formally granted itself legal authority to seize your bank account, garnish your wages, and intercept your state tax refund. This is not a routine reminder — it is the last quiet stage before enforced collection.

You typically have about 30 days before the next letter, LT11, starts your final 30-day window to stop a levy through a Collection Due Process hearing.

What CP504 Does NOT Mean

- It does not mean the IRS has already taken your money — the levy has not happened yet.
- It does not mean you have no options left. Every resolution path is still available right now.
- It does not mean you need to pay the full balance immediately to stop enforcement.

Your Three Options Right Now

1. Installment Agreement

If your balance is under $50,000 and your returns are filed, a streamlined installment agreement requires no financial disclosure and can be set up in 2–4 weeks. This is the fastest way to stop the clock.

2. Offer in Compromise (OIC)

If you genuinely cannot pay the full balance, an OIC settles your debt for less than what you owe. The national acceptance rate is 14.1%, and most self-filed offers fail because applicants get the financial disclosure formula wrong.

3. Currently Not Collectible (CNC)

If your income covers only necessary living expenses, the IRS can classify your account as currently not collectible. This pauses all collection — including levy action — while your statute of limitations clock continues running.

Whichever path applies to your situation, the key is acting before LT11 arrives. Once that letter is issued, your window narrows to 30 days and the stakes get higher.
